

Senator Doolittle on our Finances.

A few days ago Senator Doolittle made a lengthy speech upon the financial condition of the country which was so thorough and able an exposition of the whole question, and so clearly pointed out what we must do to be saved, that it has drawn out several complimentary letters from gentlemen who stand high in the financial circles of the country. We should be glad to publish the Senator's speech in full and would do so if it were not for its great length; as it is, we will content ourselves for the present, with copying the following letter, addressed to the Senator the next day after his speech was delivered. It will be observed that the letter recapitulates the main points in the speech, and is written by one of the first bankers in New York:

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE BANK.

DEAR SIR:—Allow me to express to you the pleasure with which I yesterday listened to your able and lucid exposition of the financial situation.

You have struck the key-note—"Limitation of paper money to amount outstanding"—in any form. With gold at 175 or 180 it is evident to all who understand the subject, that the point of danger is near, and will certainly be reached by any addition whatever to the existing volume. Your plan proposes:

1st. To limit all Bank Circulation to the amount now outstanding—under penalty of paying new issues in gold and silver.

2d. To limit National Bank Act to amount now authorized—say twenty-nine millions.

3d. To revoke the National Bank Act excepting so far as to allow State Banks to transfer themselves into it under the limitation as in No. 1.

4th. To require all Banks having notes in circulation beyond the amount of Capital, or notes not secured by Government or State Stocks—to reduce them to that standard—under penalty of paying 1 per cent. per month on the excess.

This is both wise and fully secures the object.

1st. It gives State Banks time to consider the best method and movement for making so important a transition.

2. It prevents the Banking-system of the country from being taken in possession by unskilled and adventurous men, and so far removes an important objection to being afflicted with them.

3d. It permits existing institutions to carry into the new system, more upon terms of equality, their coin and surplus; and thus transfer real Capital.

4th. It ensures to the new system more of the character, experience, and traditional advantages of existing organizations than can possibly be secured under a rival system, having a basis so broad as will inevitably lead to ruin, both to Banks and to the public.

5. Finally it saves the country from financial prostration.

Much more I would be glad to say, at leisure. Your views are so much in harmony with the able remarks of Senator Henderson, who followed you, that they are entirely reconcilable.

Your plan is the only one that the old State Banks as a body would for a moment consider, and to it I believe they would give most favorable regard.

Very respectfully,

Geo. S. Cox, President.

Hon. Jas. R. Doolittle, Washington, D. C.

Hon. I. C. Sloan.

Mr. Sloan made a speech in the House on the 20th inst, which we have seen referred to in our exchanges, but have seen no full report of. The debate arose upon a motion to order to a third reading the bill granting fifty millions of acres to the "People's Pacific Railroad Company," a corporation originally chartered by the State of Maine. Mr. Sloan spoke in favor of the grant, and in moving an amendment, before the final motion was put, urged that if the road would not be built upon American it would be upon British territory, and that there was an organized and reliable company ready to undertake the building of the American route, provided Congress would simply grant the lands asked for.

In this matter Mr. Sloan is right. If we do not build this Northern road, and that right speedily, our Canadian neighbors will, and the quicker our people take hold of the enterprise, the better for us. We shall refer to this matter more at length.

Mr. Sloan is proving himself to be a careful and trustworthy guardian of the people's rights, and is not only respected for the modest and courteous manner in which he attends to his official duties, but is held in high esteem for his integrity and ability as a safe and pains-taking representative.

"THE PRESENT prospects of the Confederates in this fourth year of the civil war are certainly brighter than they ever were before." Thus the London Times of the 3d inst. begins one of its heavy leaders on the American war. Not less than three hundred are contained in this little sentence. "Present prospects brighter than they were" is an admission "bull." "This fourth year of the war" implies another fourth year of the war. "Prospects brighter than they ever were before" is a gross pleasantry. We are not surprised at the falsehood of the Times, but there is no reason why it should not lie in good English.—Philadelphia Press.

Arrest of the Forger.—He is Local Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle.—He Exculpates Every One Else.

New York, May 21. The Times has the following, on the arrest of the author of the forged proclamation:

J. Howard, Jr., City Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, is the culprit. It seems that something like a week ago, Howard consulted with Mr. Kent, a member of the firm of Kent, Clapp, & Co., brokers, of the provision calling for 300,000 more men. Mr. Kent gave him his opinion, and subsequently Howard showed him the draft for a proclamation, which he claimed to know thro' secret channels of intelligence at Washington was about to be issued.

After the publication in the World and Journal of Commerce on Wednesday morning, Mr. Kent at once identified the published Proclamation with the draft. Howard had shown him, and gave information of the circumstances to Gen. Dix.

Howard was arrested and brought to the General's headquarters yesterday afternoon, where he at once made a full acknowledgment of his agency in the matter, and exculpated all the newspapers which he succeeded in victimizing from any connection with it, directly or indirectly. He employed another person, whose name, we believe, is Morrissey, to make the copies which were sent to the press.

It is reported that several other persons were cognizant of the proceedings, and also made it the basis of speculative operations in gold, but Howard, we understand, denies that any person was at all implicated with him in the transaction.

We presume when these facts are made known to the authorities at Washington, the order suspending the alleged papers will be rescinded.

Death of Hawthorne.

A telegram has announced to us the sudden death, at Plymouth, of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the distinguished author. Like Thackeray, he was found dead in his bed. He was born on the fourth of July, 1804, at Salem, Massachusetts—a town most happily described in one of his published works—and was descended from ancestors who emigrated from England.

His father, who, like many of his forefathers, was a sea-captain, died of yellow fever in Havana in 1810.

When ten years old, Nathaniel Hawthorne, on account of feeble health, was sent to live on a farm in Maine; and a few years after he returned to Salem to pursue his studies. Entering Bowdoin College, he graduated in 1825, in the same class with Rev. Dr. Cheever and Longfellow, the poet, while, even at that time, his most intimate friend was Franklin Pierce, a member of a preceding class. For some years after he resided at Salem, leading a life of strict retirement, and writing a great many tales and romances, some of which were published, while others he destroyed. Allibone says that his first published novel appeared anonymously in 1832, but that the author would never claim it, so that this earlier effort is lost to the world.

In 1837 he collected a number of his contributions to various periodicals and published them in one volume, a second series and a new edition appearing in 1842. In 1838 Mr. Bancroft, the historian, then collector at the port of Boston, appointed Mr. Hawthorne to an office in the Custom House, but in 1841 the new administration of President Harrison removed him to make way for some political favorite. He next joined the Brook Farm Association, and the incidents of his life at that period he subsequently depicted in the "Blithedale Romance." He was not there over a year, for the experiment did not prove a permanent success; and returning to Boston, he married and took up his residence in a romantic old house at Concord, where he wrote (in a room where Emerson wrote his "Nature") the papers comprised in his charming volume, "Mosses from an Old Manse." In 1848 Mr. Bancroft, then Secretary of the Navy, appointed him old friend Mr. Hawthorne, Surveyor of the port of Salem, which position he filled for three years. In 1850 he reviewed this period of his life in the introduction to "The Scarlet Letter," then published. In 1851 appeared "The House of Seven Gables," and in 1852 "The Blithedale Romance." The same year he wrote "Life of Franklin Pierce," the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and on Pierce's election was rewarded with the Liverpool consulate. Resigning in 1857, he traveled with his family through Europe and returning to this country, published "The Marble Faun," an Italian story, one of the most original and remarkable productions of his pen. His last work was the recently published book, "Our Old Home," a series of papers on English characteristics, by no means flattering to the British ruler. In addition to these well-known works, Mr. Hawthorne had at various times of his career given to the press a number of minor contributions, such as "The Journal of an African Cruiser," "The Snow Image," "Grandfather's Chair," "Tanglewood Tales," and "The Wonder Book for Boys and Girls." Most of his works have reached many editions, and are popular in England as well as here.

Mr. James T. Fields, the Boston publisher, induced Mr. Hawthorne to give his "Scarlet Letter" to the world; and George William Curtis wrote for "The House of Seven Gables" an admirable biography of the late author, illustrated by a sketch of the Old Manse.

In his personal character Hawthorne was, when the barrier of shyness behind which he kept aloof from general society was once broken through, amiable and agreeable. As a writer he occupied a high rank among the authors of the age. His earlier writings were exceedingly graceful and delicate in thought and language, yet there was in all their grace and beauty a certain gloomy gloom of manner, which afterward disappeared.

As he went on, his style became more vigorous and more varied, sparkling with wit and condensed in thought. His novels, with prodigious power in portraying the stronger passions, and occasionally great skill in the delineation of character, are altogether the best written novels of the day, and second in that respect to none in the language. His book on England is indefinitely more witty, more vividly descriptive, more eloquent, more attractive in every respect than any book an English tourist ever wrote about America, and perhaps we might say, any other country. The United States have lost in Hawthorne one of the greatest ornaments of its literature, and the world of letters a man of genius.—N. Y. Post.

The Rochester Democrat says: "When the news of the terrible fighting of the armies in Virginia about the old Wilderness, began to come in, and all accounts seemed to show that Grant was driving Lee before him, a notorious Copperhead stepped forth and offered to bet $500 that we were whipped. A broad-shouldered, two-limbed fellow, who had fought one campaign under the old flag, stepped up to him and asked, with something of the old battle in his eye, 'Tell me, sir, when you mean by "we"?' The Copperhead quailed, and replied, 'Why, General Lee and us Copperheads, of course!'

Hancock's Splendid Charge.

The special correspondent of the Times, writing on Friday, gives the following vivid account of Hancock's charge upon the enemy's works:

"I have just returned from the scene of General Hancock's brilliant victory of Thursday morning. At the point at which his assault was made, the rebel breast-works formed an angle or salient, and his men advanced silently and, without firing a shot, entered the works at the salient and swept up the inside of the right, making the splendid haul of prisoners already known to you. Unfortunately, the supporting line cheered when nearing the works, otherwise we would, the prisoners say, have captured both Ewell and Lee."

The assault was made between four and five o'clock, in the gray of the morning. Barlow's division, which had the advance, Milke's brigade leading, went up in column by battalion double on the center, Birney's division in two lines of battle, and the division of Gibbon and Mead, in the second line supporting. The storming column rushed over the enemy's breast-works, which were exceedingly strong, with a ditch in front, and drove the enemy back for a mile. Here the enemy rallied, and Hancock at six A. M. returned and formed his line of battle in the enemy's works. As this was the key of the whole position our right was gradually refused, and the main body of the army massed on the left. The Sixth Corps (Wright) which had been on the right of the Second, withdrew behind their skirmish line and united with Hancock's right, and afterward two divisions of Warren's were brought over. The history of the day after six o'clock in the morning is all summed up in five successive and fierce assaults which Lee made to retake the lost position. At first Ewell's corps alone confronted Hancock, but during the day Hill and Longstreet were drawn over from the rebel left, and the whole army of Lee flung itself in five desperate efforts to recapture the breast-works. But it was all in vain, as every assault met with a bloody repulse.

So terrible was the death-grapple, however, that at different times of the day the rebel colors were planted on the one side of the works and ours on the other, the men fighting across the parapet. Nothing during the war has equalled the savage desperation of this struggle, which continued for fourteen hours, and the scene of the conflict, from which I have just come, presents a spectacle of horror that curdles the blood of the boldest. The angle of the works at which Hancock entered, and for the possession of which the day's fight was made, is a perfect Golgotha. In this angle of death the dead and wounded rebels lie, the morning, literally in piles—men in the agonies of death groaning beneath the dead bodies of their comrades. On an area of four acres in your center position, lie not less than a thousand rebel corpses, many literally torn to shreds by hundreds of balls, and several with bayonet thrusts through and through their bodies, pierced on the very margins of the parapet, which they were determined to retake or perish in the attempt. The one exclamation of every man who looks on the spectacle is, 'God forbid that I should ever gaze upon such a sight again!'

Hancock's movement is regarded here as the most brilliantly-conceived and executed tactical operation of the war, and has added to the splendid fame he won in the three days' fight in the Wilderness. After the turning movement of the morning the Sixth Corps and two divisions of the Second corps were included in the "History of the day. They share the honors of the glorious, but bloody field of Spotsylvania. Our loss of yesterday must reach ten thousand."

NATIVE WINES.—Sacred History

abounds in allusions to wine, and as there are thirteen distinct Hebrew terms used in the Bible to distinguish vintages of different kinds, condition and ages, it is evident that the "ancient people" were no less particular in the matter of "brands" than are the people of the present day. The Greek and Romans had two hundred varieties, of which the "Falerian" was the choicest; and the products of particular vineyards were as highly esteemed in Athens and Rome, as the Cliquet and Maiternich wines now are in London and Paris. The wines of antiquity were often villainously adulterated. The art of "doctoring" the juice of the grape is so far from being a modern invention that it dates back to the siege of Troy. Helen, the fair and frail, is said to have learned the trick in Egypt, and to have practised it for the sake of increasing the exhilarating properties of the wine she gave to the defenders of the city after a hard battle with the Greeks.

The safest and best of all exhilarants is good wine. Many physicians and matrons suppose we must have foreign wine. There is one hundred times the quantity of wines exported from France, Spain and Germany, than can be manufactured there from the quantity of grapes. There is but one safeguard, and that is to use our native wines. Imported wines now pay a heavy duty, and a bottle of real Port or Sherry can only be obtained at a high price. There is no duty or tax on native wines—therefore, in the name of purity and economy, let us have our own native wines.

Messrs. Bennett, Pictors & Co., of Chicago, always have an assorted stock of fine imported wines in U. S. bonded warehouses, from the most reliable houses of France, Spain and Germany, also brandies, gins, rums, &c.; and have for the past three years been making extensive preparations for the manufacture of home-made wines. They have the most extensive arrangements with fruit growers, and in the proper season they gather strawberries, cherries, peaches, blackberries, raspberries, &c., to an enormous amount. Their strawberry, cherry, blackberry, raspberry and muscat wines far excel many of the imported wines, both in purity and exhilarating effects. Many of these home-made wines are being largely adulterated, and many a bottle of cherry wine is sold, which never had a drop of cherry juice in it. Buy none but those with the unmistakable label of Bennett, Pictors & Co. These gentlemen are men of high respectability, and guarantee every article from their house, pure and unadulterated.
